Unit 11

土佐藩(現在の高知県)で漁をしていた万次郎は、ある日、漁の途中で遭難してしまいます。その後、彼は数奇な人生を歩みます。

In 1841, Manjiro went out on the sea in a little ship with some older boys. When they were fishing, a storm came. The little ship was damaged, and they could not come back. After a few days, Manjiro and his friends had no food or water. They became sick. On the eighth day, they saw a small island. They swam to the island.

Six months later, a ship saw them. It was an American ship which was sailing to Hawaii. They were saved. Manjiro and his friends could not speak English. But Manjiro learned things quickly and made friends with the captain. The captain took Manjiro to America. Manjiro was only fourteen years old when he arrived in America.

Manjiro lived with the captain's family and went to school. He was the first Japanese person who studied in America. About ten years later, he came back to Japan. In those days Japan's doors were closed to other countries. So he was questioned by the Tokugawa Government.

When the Kurofune came to Japan in 1853, the Tokugawa Government asked Manjiro for help. When the Kanrin-maru went to America, Manjiro went with some people from the Japanese government and worked as an interpreter. Manjiro became a bridge between the two countries.
